With the increasing number of construction sites found in developing states and cities in India, there is a huge demand for construction workers. As groups of workers travel from one state to another to fend for their families, they miss out on a stable life with basics. When they go to a new place, they make homes and stay there for months till they build beautiful companies and housing societies. How ironic is it, that the hands that make beautiful homes are not allowed to have one of their own?

It is alarming how they stay in these slums. What is even more alarming is the way their children are in the slums. While the parents are busy working, these children sit idle near the construction site. With their unkempt hair, muddy faces and soiled shirts and frocks, they are deprived of basic necessities. These children do not enjoy the comfort that you and I enjoy.

To challenge this, schools and colleges should visit construction sites to share what they have learnt. They should spend time with them to better their condition.
